Description

The Gault Center is developing an annotated bibliography examining how facially neutral juvenile probation and surveillance practices disproportionately harm minoritized youth. The project focuses on practices such as electronic monitoring, association conditions, and search and seizure conditions, analyzing them through a public health lens. The research will synthesize interdisciplinary findings on the mental health and wellbeing impacts of youth surveillance. The bibliography will also identify potential legal arguments to challenge these practices based on disparate impact and harm. This initiative is part of The Gault Center's Juvenile Probation Accountability Coalition.
