Description

The Gault Center is leading a project to create an annotated legal bibliography examining how facially neutral juvenile justice laws and policies produce racially disparate outcomes for youth. The bibliography will span four core areas: transfer, age of jurisdiction, detention and conditions, and gun policy. The project will also examine the historical context and intent behind these legal frameworks to uncover the structural roots of racial inequity. By cataloging and analyzing relevant legal authorities, the bibliography will identify opportunities for legal and policy reform. The final product will serve as a foundational research tool for advocates and policymakers working to address racial disparities in the juvenile justice system.
