Description

Anthony Graves is a criminal justice reform advocate and the founder of the Peer Navigator Project. Anthony's own experience of being wrongfully convicted and spending 18 1/2 years on death row in Texas inspired him to create this innovative program, which trains formerly incarcerated individuals to become peer navigators and help others through the criminal justice system. Through the Peer Navigator Project, Anthony aims to build trust and foster hope among incarcerated individuals and their families, ultimately working towards achieving the best possible outcomes in criminal cases. By partnering with criminal defense lawyers, we strive to contribute to a more just and equitable criminal justice system.

Peer Navigator Project has experienced growth and requires assistance with corporate governance, a review of its current contracts, and creation of employment contracts.
